

CORY TRÉPANIÉ

INTO THE ARCTIC

Aspirations

It is my hope that when one views my paintings from the Arctic that their own sense of wonder and awe will be ignited.

Perhaps in some small way this collection of canvases, from these truly wild places, will reconnect some with the idea of turning off the television for a while, setting down their iPads, and stepping out into nature more often... or for the first time.

And maybe, just maybe, my art will reach the public and some in government alike, and stir them to take better care of our wild spaces so that our children, and theirs to come, will have them to rejuvenate and inspire them some day.

And finally, it is my desire that my art might leave others with the idea that the value of nature should not be measured by that which we can extract from her alone, but by the life giving fullness she embodies and freely gives.
